Quantal Bioscience (www.quantalbioscience.com) is a unique small science business based in Western Sydney that was started in 2015 by a group of friends and ex-colleagues from CSIRO, with a passion for microbiology, education and small business development.

Belinda, the Director of Quantal Bioscience, first encountered The Workary in 2018, attending a breakfast business networking session. She was immediately blown-away by the unique opportunities and facilities for small business provided by The Workary, and by the warm and welcoming environment created by The Workary team. Right from that first engagement, Belinda and the team at Quantal Bioscience have been great fans of The Workary, and The Workary has supported Belinda and the Quantal team. With four staff and a single laboratory initially, since meeting the team at the The Workary, Quantal has grown to a team of ten. During that time Quantal has joined together with two other Western Sydney-based businesses and has co-developed a commercial fermentation facility, based in the Fairfield City Council LGA. In February of this year, Quantal opened its second microbiology laboratory, based in Hobart.

Over the past four years The Workary has provided numerous opportunities for the Quantal team to network with other small businesses and business support services in Western Sydney. Through these opportunities Quantal has met some wonderful people, and even some new 'flatmates' for their shared laboratory facility in North Parramatta.

Quantal Bioscience is a small research laboratory doing big things with tiny microbes! Quantal loves bringing the amazing world of microbiology and scientific research to all! Starting with just a single school holiday workshop initially Quantal has grown to provide a comprehensive program of school holiday science workshops, after school science programs and programs for both primary and secondary schools, including teacher training, through their MSchool (www.mschool.com.au) initiative. But Quantal loves working with students of all ages. The Workary has been instrumental in supporting Quantal in establishing science training for adults and small businesses through their Skilled in Science (www.skilledinscience.com.au) initiative.

In 2019 Quantal received a grant from the Federal Government's Women in STEM and Entrepreneurship program, to train more than 60 women in Western Sydney in food technology and science, food safety, product development and small business entrepreneurship, to help them establish their own food-based businesses.

Throughout Quantal's Food Science 4 Thought & Profit program, The Workary was there for the program participants, providing space and facilities for meetings and program elements. Quantal could not have done it without The Workary!

And, the program participants were amazed to learn about the support that The Workary could provide for their own fledgling business ventures!

Most recently, The Workary has once again proved invaluable for Quantal Bioscience's growth as a Western Sydney-based business. Coming along to The Workary's Christmas get-together at the end of 2020, Belinda was expecting to have a lovely morning of catching up with The Workary staff, networking with other small businesses, and tucking into some delicious snacks (as always—The Workary breakfasts, morning teas and lunches are ALWAYS awesome!). But that Christmas get-together once again opened up an amazing new opportunity for Quantal, when Manjit from the Workary handed Belinda a flyer for a new accelerator program, SydWest Global Connections, from Launch Pad at Western Sydney University. This was the first that Belinda had heard about the program, and she was immediately intrigued. Fast forward less than 3 months, and Quantal has just been accepted into the SydWest Global Connections program with WSU's Launch Pad program, with the benefit of business mentoring, training and networking valued at around $50,000 over the next 6 months, to take Quantal to the next phase of their business growth. And, once again, Quantal could not have done it without The Workary!
